

Universal Declaration of Human Rights

Ayden Chege

William Hoff

Santiago Robles

Junior Division

Group Website

Process Paper Word Count:

Website Word Count:

The Universal Declaration of Human Rights is a document that universally protects all human rights and grants freedom and equality for all mankind (Universal Declaration of Human Rights). From 1945 to 1948, the many attendees of the United Nations General Assembly had the responsibility to create a document to universally protect the rights of all peoples, without conflicting with religious and cultural beliefs (“Universal Declaration of Human Rights” OHCHR). The document impacted the world with universal equality and freedom (Universal Declaration of Human Rights). The Universal Declaration of Human Rights has been acknowledged for both inspiring and influencing the creation of many laws, constitutions, and how individuals are seen by one another (“The Universal Declaration...”). This document has been recognized worldwide as an important document that protects all human rights no matter culture or religion (Universal Declaration of Human Rights).

For our group’s topic, we chose the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. We chose this topic because it greatly influenced our world today. The Universal Declaration of Human Rights is a document that was created by the United Nations. After being created, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights influenced the creation of many future documents that have granted freedom and rights to minorities that have been mistreated for centuries. The Universal Declaration of Human Rights as well as the documents it influenced have greatly affected our lives today, and it has inspired and continues to inspire many people today.

We conducted our research by using the sources that had the most facts. One primary source that was useful was a source made by the original creators of the document, The United Nations. It gave us its law, and how it was created. We found many sources similar to this source.

We found this by searching up the document and it was the first source that came up. All of the sources that we used were very useful to making our website.

In our website, we wanted a simple layout and design that would be consistent throughout the whole website. For each page, The title is on the top, then the webpage access buttons, then an image and the text beneath it. We wanted a color scheme that matched with most of our images; so after searching for images, most of the backgrounds were a shade of blue, so we decided to use a blue scheme. For each image, we wanted it to have blue on it, and for most of them to depict what the section it is used for. For example, the influence section of the website uses an image with people looking at the document, to show that the document influences everyone on earth.