The integration of baseball is how the color barrier of not letting black people play became able to play by showing the white people that they were not afraid or scared of the things that were said and done to them. We chose this topic because we both love baseball and wanted an interesting topic so that we would be interested and not be bored. Our topic is important because the sport would never have changed, and it would be the same, and it wouldn't let 30.5% of people know to play their favorite sport. Another reason why this topic is important is because if this had never happened other sports and other small things like sports would have never been segregated.

For our research, we created our website using the Newport Beach Public Library and a few interviews. The Newport Beach Public Library helped us by providing several newspaper articles and images as primary sources. Another source that helped us a lot was a Jackie Robinson interview we found on YouTube. It helped us by giving us people's opinions and Jackie Robinson's own opinion on the Integration of Baseball. These sources helped us because they all helped us shape our opinions on this topic.

We chose a website because we knew that it would be one of the less complicated projects and wouldn't be difficult to get used to. And it came out to be true. We knew that if we did an exhibit board we wouldn't be good at cutting straight and would need to work on it at each other's houses. Next, we didn't want to do a documentary because we didn't have experience with editing a video and thought it would be too hard to figure out. So we just decided to go with the website. Our steps to creating this website was first to create all the pages. The Second step was to add the text that we already had so we just copied and pasted it. Finally, we just added the pictures and the other tabs for the other slides

This topic fits in the category of Rights and responsibilities because in the rights African Americans didn't Have the right to play baseball And white people didn't want to change anything so they had to fight for that right. And for responsibility, They needed to keep their composure or else they would be kicked out of the MLB and nothing would have changed for them. Our topic is important because The MLB would have never changed and would have not let 30.5% of baseball players have a secure environment and a successful career. And If a small thing like baseball would have never changed you think you think other things would have to just cause white people wanted to no if these African Americans had to fight for just a sport other people would have to fight too.
