We were taking a summer class about how to research and build an NHD project. It was suggested to us and it seemed like the perfect topic. As Jews, people of our religion really struggled during WW2. Understanding more about what happened and the heroes that helped win the war is really meaningful to us.

- How did you research your project?

Our main source of information came from our personal interviews with Rick Beyer and George Dramis. We had 40 minute interviews with each of them and mainly had a great time and learned a lot. The Ghost Army Legacy Project was the website that we used the most. It contained everything we would need and more. We visited various websites and dug up whatever quotes and pictures we were able to find.

- How did you create your project?

We decided to make a website because we knew it would probably be the most fun and could be very helpful for our futures. We would mess around with the code and hope that we did it right. Everything was written on a doc and then copied into the website. We did our best to edit the clips from our interviews to the perfect second and make it as neat as possible. The goal was to make the website short and sweet, easy to go through and read with great content.

The Ghost Army was all about deceptions and miscommunications to their enemies. They did this through inflatable tanks, spoofed radio sounds, setting up fake headquarters, and even pretending to get drunk at a bar and blurt out fake data, knowing that they were being spied on. A particular mission that was messed up because of a miscommunication was operation Brest. Although the deception was successful, there was an order to launch an attack where the Ghost Army was drawing attention leading to a failed mission. Our topic is very important today. It is essential that Americans remember the heroes of WWII especially when very few of them are still alive to share their stories with us.
