

Sofia Penglase and Luciana Costanzo

6 May 2020

“Breaking the Barriers of Residential Segregation in Chicago”

Bibliography

Primary Sources

Apartment Building in Chicago's Black Belt. Library of Congress. Prints and Photographs Division. FSA-OWI Photograph Collection. Accessed May 6, 2020.
<https://online-infobase-com.gatekeeper.chipublib.org/HRC/Search/ImageDetails/5?imageId=41087>

This source was used for an image of an apartment building in the “Black Belt”.

“Black Chicago Aspires for Residential Security: Battling the Restrictive Covenant, 1927-1948.” Friends of Historic Second Church. Accessed April 21, 2020.
<https://www.historicsecondchurch.org/programs-calendar/2020/2/23/black-chicago-aspires-for-residential-security-battling-the-restrictive-covenant-1927-1948>.

This source was used for an image of a newspaper about restrictive covenants being banned.

Bohlmann, Rachel, and Kevin Boyle. “The Struggle for Civil Rights in the Urban North.” The Newberry Digital Collections for the Classroom. The Newberry. Accessed March 2, 2020.

<https://dcc.newberry.org/collections/the-struggle-for-civil-rights-in-the-urban-north>.

This source provided an image of an article from the Chicago Daily News that discussed the integration of African Americans and the resulting flight of white tenants from the integrated neighborhood. This source was used purely for images.

“Bulletin of the Chicago Housing Authority (March 1941, Page 3).” Encyclopedia of Chicago. Chicago Historical Society. Accessed May 6, 2020.

<http://www.encyclopedia.chicagohistory.org/pages/10874.html>.

This source provided an image from the Chicago Housing Authority describing living conditions in houses on the South Side.

“Cicero, Illinois Race Riot of 1951: Mob of 4000 Whites Attack 1 Black Family.”

Originalpeople.org, February 25, 2013.

<https://originalpeople.org/cicero-illinois-race-riot-1951/>.

This source provided a picture of Harvey Clark’s house when white rioters sat outside of his house to protest his occupancy. Harvey Clark was an African American who moved into the predominantly white Chicago suburb of Cicero during the 1950s. This source was purely used for images.

Fulton, Walter W. “Letter and Restrictive Covenant, Auburn Park Property Restriction Association, Inc., 1929.” Encyclopedia of Chicago. Chicago Historical Society. Accessed March 2, 2020. <https://encyclopedia.chicagohistory.org/pages/11237.html>.

This source included a letter with an attached restrictive covenant agreement addressed to a white homeowner. This source illustrated some of the language that was used in restrictive covenants during this time period. This source was used purely for images.

Growing Up in Chicago's "Black Belt" - Timuel Black. The University of Chicago, 2014.

<https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=Xqn5OmF23HY&feature=youtu.be>.

We used this video to gain a better understanding of life in the “Black Belt” of Chicago and put this video on our website.

“Holman D. Pettibone, a Tribute” The American Title Association. September, 1951. Volume XXX, Number 8. <https://www.alta.org/title-news/1951/v30i08.pdf>

This source provided an image of Holman D. Pettibone.

Layson, Hana, and Kenneth Warren. “Chicago and the Great Migration, 1915–1950.” The Newberry Digital Collections for the Classroom. The Newberry. Accessed March 2, 2020. <https://dcc.newberry.org/collections/chicago-and-the-great-migration>.

This source provided a 1934 map of the racial segregation in Chiacago. This source was used purely for images.

Long, Zach. “Then and Now: Marshall Field and Company Building.” Time Out Chicago. Time Out, December 2, 2016.

<https://www.timeout.com/chicago/blog/then-and-now-marshall-field-and-company-building-120216>.

This source was used for an image of the Marshall Field store.

Mead, Mildred LaDue. Chicago Housing. Photograph. The University of Chicago Photographic Archive. Chicago: The University of Chicago, n.d. University of Chicago Library, Special Collections Research Center.

<http://photoarchive.lib.uchicago.edu/db.xqy?one=apf2-09258.xml>.

This source was used for an image of a mother and son.

Moser, Whet. "How White Housing Riots Shaped Chicago." Chicago Magazine. Chicago Tribune Media Group, April 29, 2015.

<https://www.chicagomag.com/city-life/April-2015/How-White-Housing-Riots-Shaped-Chicago/>.

This source showed a picture of a burning piano, a casualty of the result of a 1950 white housing riot after white neighbors learned an African American tenant had moved in. This source was used purely for images.

The Near North Side Property Owners Association, "Flyer and map," Newberry Digital Exhibitions, accessed March 2, 2020, http://publications.newberry.org/digital_exhibitions/items/show/87.

This source provided an image showing how the North Side Property Owners Association advocated against Black people moving into white neighborhoods and a map they created delineating where Black people were already living.

Racial and Religious Restrictive Covenants. Accessed April 21, 2020.

<http://wbhsi.net/~wendyplotkin/DeedsWeb/index.html>.

This source was used for an image of a Chicago Defender newspaper.

"The Rise and Demise of Racially Restrictive Covenants in Bloomingdale." D.C. Policy Center. Accessed April 21, 2020.

<https://www.dcpolicycenter.org/publications/racially-restrictive-covenants-bloomingdale/>

This source was used for an image showing an ad addressing white home buyers.

Ralph, James. "Civil Rights Movement." The Encyclopedia of Chicago. Chicago Historical Society. Accessed April 21, 2020.

<http://www.encyclopedia.chicagohistory.org/pages/293.html>.

This source was used for an image of an NAACP conference.

"Shelley v. Kraemer, 1948." STLtoday.com. St. Louis Post-Dispatch , December 13, 2017.

https://www.stltoday.com/shelley-v-kraemer-1948/article_a1a21ad2-e03c-11e7-9b20-6bb5c15289a2.html.

This source provided an image of the Shelley family.

Siegel, Arthur S. "Detroit, Michigan. Riot at the Sojourner Truth Homes, a New U.S. Federal Housing Project, Caused by White Neighbors' Attempt to Prevent Negro Tenants from Moving in. Sign with American Flag 'We Want White Tenants in Our White Community,' Directly Opposite the Housing Project." Library of Congress, January 1, 1970. <http://www.loc.gov/pictures/resource/fsa.8d13572/>.

This source provided an image demonstrating how white residents would protest against Black people moving into their neighborhoods.

Skyline Looking toward Lake Michigan, Chicago, 1940s. Photograph. Carli Digital Collections. Chicago. Newberry Library. Accessed May 6, 2020.

http://collections.carli.illinois.edu/cdm/singleitem/collection/nby_chicago/id/3072.

This source provided an image of the Chicago downtown skyline in the 1940s.

"Social History." Social History Of Chicago Housing and the CHA . Roosevelt University. Accessed May 6, 2020.

<https://www.roosevelt.edu/centers/new-deal-studies/history-fair/public-housing/social-history>.

This source provided images showing the poor living conditions in the "Black Belt".

Stewart, Jessica. "Striking B&W Photos Capture the Black Experience in 1940s South Side Chicago." My Modern Met, October 11, 2017.

<https://mymodernmet.com/southside-chicago-great-migration/>.

This source included several photos depicting Blacks in 1940s South Side Chicago, shortly after the Great Migration. Several of the subjects were kids, going about their everyday lives, or men looking for work. This source was purely used for images.

Stoddard, Larry. Photograph. Caledonianrecord.com. Chicago: Caledonian Record Publishing, May 13, 2017.

https://www.caledonianrecord.com/features/today_in_history/today-in-history-may-13/article_6b804ae4-2e96-11e7-9841-1ba09059e7ce.html.

This source provided an image of people protesting residential segregation.

“Then and Now, Cottage Grove-35th.” Chicago History Today, December 18, 2014.

<https://chicagohistorytoday.wordpress.com/2014/07/10/chicago-then-and-now-cottage-grove-35th-street/>.

This source was used for an image of Cottage Grove Ave.

“This is a Crime Too,” Inbetween Peoples, accessed April 21, 2020, <https://as205.omeka.net/items/show/88>.

This source was used for an image showing a cartoon from the Chicago Defender.

Valle, Nicole. “Racial-Zoning.” Urban Studies 101. Queens College , March 22, 2017.

<http://understandingtheurban.qwriting.qc.cuny.edu/2017/03/02/racial-zoning/>.

This source provided an image of a flyer saying only white people are allowed to purchase homes there.

Wilkerson, Isabel. “July 11, 1951: Cicero Riot Over Housing Desegregation.” Zinn Education Project. Accessed March 2, 2020. <https://www.zinnedproject.org/news/tdih/cicero-riot>.

This source included an image of Harvey Clark and his family. This source was used purely for images.

Wilkerson, Isabel. “The Long-Lasting Legacy of the Great Migration.” Smithsonian.com. Smithsonian Institution, September 1, 2016.

<https://www.smithsonianmag.com/history/long-lasting-legacy-great-migration-180960118/>.

This source includes an image of a Black family migrating North during the Great Depression. This source was used purely for images.

Secondary Sources

Biles, Roger. "Race and Housing in Chicago." Journal of the Illinois State Historical Society (1998-) 94, no. 1 (2001): 31-38. Accessed February 29, 2020. www.jstor.org/stable/40193533.

This source helped provide an overview of how Black people migrated to Chicago and what policies controlled where they were able to live and purchase homes. This source provided several quotes.

Bogira, Steve. "Separate, Unequal, and Ignored." Chicago Reader. Chicago Reader, March 1, 2020. <https://www.chicagoreader.com/chicago/chicago-politics-segregation-african-american-black-white-hispanic-latino-population-census-community/Content?oid=3221712>.

This source helped us understand how the history of racially restrictive covenants has contributed to the residential segregation of Chicago today and why this is an important challenge the city should address.

Boyd, Robert L. "Residential Segregation by Race and the Black Merchants of Northern Cities during the Early Twentieth Century." Sociological Forum 13, no. 4 (1998): 595-609. Accessed February 29, 2020. www.jstor.org/stable/684865.

This source provided statistics on how the Black population in Chicago grew and how their spatial isolation increased.

Brooks, Richard R. W. "Covenants without Courts: Enforcing Residential Segregation with Legally Unenforceable Agreements." The American Economic Review 101, no. 3 (2011): 360-65. Accessed February 26, 2020. www.jstor.org/stable/29783770.

This source provided us with information on why covenants were created, how they were implemented, and how they continued to maintain residential segregation even when they were not judicially enforceable.

Choldin, Harvey M. "Chicago Housing Authority." Encyclopedia of Chicago. Chicago Historical Society. Accessed March 1, 2020. <http://www.encyclopedia.chicagohistory.org/pages/253.html>.

This article provided context around the Chicago Housing Authority, an organization that was responsible for segregated public housing. This source was useful in creating a broader picture of segregated housing in Chicago, outside of restrictive covenants.

Expansion of the "Black Belt" in Chicago's South Side.

<https://online-infobase-com.gatekeeper.chipublib.org/HRC/Search/ImageDetails/5?imageId=61400>

This source was used for a map showing the expansion of the "Black Belt".

Folded Map Project Analyzes Chicago's Segregation. Chicago Sun-Times, 2018.

<https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=aRRIpffM2FI>.

This source provided another outlook on the current state of residential segregation today and an example of efforts to combat it. We also used this video on our website.

Goldsborough, Bob. "Chicago Is the 13th Most Segregated Metro Area in U.S., Study Finds." chicagotribune.com. Chicago Tribune, May 20, 2019.

<https://www.chicagotribune.com/real-estate/ct-re-0603-housing-segregation-20180525-story.html>.

This source provided more information on the current residential segregation in Chicago and provided quotes.

Gonsalves, Katherine. "Segregated Housing: Martin Luther King to Cabrini Green." Race, Poverty & the Environment 15, no. 1 (2008): 17-18. Accessed February 26, 2020.

www.jstor.org/stable/41554578.

This source built context around how de jure segregation has been maintained not just through restrictive covenants, but through racial zoning, red-lining, and urban renewal. This source was particularly useful in providing a necessary background to the history of de jure segregation in Chicago.

Great Migration. Infobase Learning. Accessed May 6, 2020.

<https://online-infobase-com.gatekeeper.chipublib.org/HRC/Search/ImageDetails/5?imageId=58820>

This source was used for a map illustrating the Great Migration.

Grigoryeva, Angelina, and Martin Ruef. "The Historical Demography of Racial Segregation." American Sociological Review 80, no. 4 (2015): 814-42. Accessed February 29, 2020.

www.jstor.org/stable/24756427.

This source helped us gain a deeper understanding of what different statistics used to measure segregation mean and how we should interpret them, such as the spatial isolation index.

Grossman, Ron. "The Great Migration: For Southern Blacks, Chicago Offered Jobs - but Not the Warmest Welcome from Whites." chicagotribune.com. Chicago Tribune, May 31, 2019. <https://www.chicagotribune.com/opinion/commentary/ct-perspec-flash-great-migration-south-african-americans-0415-20180410-story.html>.

This source helped us understand the risks Black people faced when moving into white neighborhoods and what other phenomenon increased the degree of residential segregation in Chicago.

Hirsch, Arnold R. "Blockbusting." Encyclopedia of Chicago. Chicago Historical Society. Accessed March 1, 2020. <http://www.encyclopedia.chicagohistory.org/pages/147.html>.

This article discussed and defined blockbusting in Chicago and how blockbusting ensured residential segregation long after restrictive covenants and racial zoning was outlawed. This article's description of blockbusting created a better understanding of what barriers existed that prevented African Americans from integrating neighborhoods once restrictive covenants were deemed illegal.

Hirsch, Arnold R. Making the Second Ghetto Race and Housing in Chicago, 1940 - 1960. Chicago: Univ. of Chicago Press, n.d.

This book gave us a lot of information on the housing shortage and its effects on residential segregation, provided many quotes, and helped us better understand the effects of private institutions.

Hirsch, Arnold R. "Restrictive Covenants." Encyclopedia of Chicago. Chicago Historical Society. Accessed March 1, 2020. <http://www.encyclopedia.chicagohistory.org/pages/1067.html>.

This article defined restrictive covenants and their origins in Chicago, while also addressing the legal history surrounding restrictive covenants. This article provided a basic understanding of how restrictive covenants operated in Chicago.

Lake Meadows Apartment Complex. December 5, 2011. Photograph. Fine Art America. <https://fineartamerica.com/featured/lake-meadows-apartment-complex-everett.html>.

This source was used for an image showing the Lake Meadows apartment complex.

Lawrence, Jacob. “Jacob Lawrence. They Arrived in Great Numbers into Chicago, the Gateway of the West. 1940-41.” The Museum of Modern Art. Accessed March 2, 2020.

<https://www.moma.org/collection/works/78536>.

We used this image and the caption to provide context to why the Black population in Chicago was increasing during the early twentieth century.

McPherson, James Alan. In My Father's House There Are Many Mansions, and I'm Going to Get Me Some of Them Too: The Story of the Contract Buyers League. Boston, MA: The Atlantic, 1972.

This source provided us with the story of the Contract Buyers League, an example of how Black Chicagoans attempted to break the housing barriers. This source also explained how unfair contracts were offered to Black families and how these contracts had devastating financial consequences.

Metropolitan Planning Council. “The Cost of Segregation.” Metropolitan Planning Council. Accessed May 6, 2020.

https://www.metroplanning.org/costofsegregation/default.aspx?utm_source=/costofsegregation&utm_medium=web&utm_campaign=redirect.

This source provided several quotes on the damage of residential segregation today and how people’s lives would change if it were not present.

Moser, Whet. “Chicago Isn't Just Segregated, It Basically Invented Modern Segregation.” Chicago Magazine, March 31, 2017.

<https://www.chicagomag.com/city-life/March-2017/Why-Is-Chicago-So-Segregated/>.

This source helped us gain a better understanding of why Chicago is so segregated today and the policies that were implemented that caused this.

Moser, Whet. “Chicago Segregation and South African Apartheid Share Parallel Paths.” Chicago Magazine. Chicago Tribune Media Group, January 10, 2014.

<https://www.chicagomag.com/city-life/January-2014/The-Parallel-Paths-of-South-African-Apartheid-and-Chicago-Segregation/>.

This source provided another perspective on how the residential segregation in Chicago was caused by various laws and practices, and how this segregation continues to impact peoples' opportunities today.

Novara, Marisa, and Amy Khare. "Two Extremes of Residential Segregation: Chicago's Separate Worlds & Policy Strategies for Integration." Cambridge, MA: President and Fellows of Harvard College, 2017.

This source provided some information on residential segregation in Chicago today and ideas for what could be done to help fix this issue.

Plotkin, Wendy. "'Hemmed In': The Struggle against Racial Restrictive Covenants and Deed Restrictions in Post-WWII Chicago." Journal of the Illinois State Historical Society (1998-)94, no. 1 (2001): 39-69. Accessed February 26, 2020.
www.jstor.org/stable/40193534.

This article provides context on restrictive covenants post-World War II by defining restrictive covenants and establishing their extent. This article was significant because of its use in elaborating on a crucial time period in the history of racially restrictive covenants in Chicago.

Rast, Joel. "Critical Junctures, Long-Term Processes: Urban Redevelopment in Chicago and Milwaukee, 1945-1980." Social Science History 33, no. 4 (2009): 393-426. Accessed April 20, 2020. doi:10.2307/40587323.

This source helped us gain a better understanding of urban development and the timeline of many different events that contributed to residential segregation.

Rothschild, Sarah. "Protest Restrictive Covenant." A Just Chicago. Chicago Teachers Union, November 16, 2016.

<https://ajustchicago.org/2016/11/continuing-legacy-segregation/protestrestrictivecovenant/>.

This source was used for an image of a protest.

Rothstein, Richard. The Color of Law: A Forgotten History of How Our Government Segregated America. New York: Liveright Publishing Corporation, a division of W. W. Norton & Company, 2018.

This book had a much broader scope on the history of de jure segregation in the United States. This book was particularly useful in identifying key turning points in the history of de jure segregation.

Rothstein, Richard. "What Have We—De Facto Racial Isolation or De Jure Segregation?" Human Rights 40, no. 3 (2014): 8-10. Accessed February 26, 2020.
www.jstor.org/stable/26408465.

This source provided information on the various ways in which residential segregation can impact equity in a city, specifically related to educational opportunities.

Ruzich, Joseph. "Chicago Mayor Kennelly Honored a Half-Century after His Death - in Suburbia." chicagotribune.com. Chicago Tribune, August 19, 2019.
<https://www.chicagotribune.com/news/ct-talk-riverside-brookfield-kennelly-stadium-20150327-story.html>.

This source provided an image of Mayor Kennelly.

Scanlan, Alfred L. "Racial Restrictions in Real Estate--Property Values Versus Human Values", 24 Notre Dame L. Rev. 157 (1949). <http://scholarship.law.nd.edu/ndlr/vol24/iss2/3>

This source helped us better understand how restrictive covenants were able to operate from a judicial perspective and how they were challenged.

Silva, Catherine. "Racial Restrictive Covenants History Enforcing Neighborhood Segregation in Seattle." The Seattle Civil Rights and Labor History Project. University of Washington. Accessed March 2, 2020. https://depts.washington.edu/civilr/covenants_report.htm.

This source provided examples of how Black people tried to break housing barriers in other cities, illustrating the pattern of these segregation issues occurring all over the nation.

Silver, Nate. "The Most Diverse Cities Are Often The Most Segregated." FiveThirtyEight. FiveThirtyEight, May 1, 2015.
<https://fivethirtyeight.com/features/the-most-diverse-cities-are-often-the-most-segregated/>.

This source provided information on how Chicago continues to be one of the most segregated cities in the country despite being racially and ethnically diverse. This source also provided a map showing residential segregation today.

Sister Claire Marie, O. S. F. "Some Aspects of Residential Segregation in Chicago." The American Catholic Sociological Review 14, no. 4 (1953): 234-43. Accessed March 2, 2020. doi:10.2307/3708092.

This source provided an image showing the increasing Black population in Chicago as well as more information on covenants and their impact on the opportunities available for Black people.

Williams, Aaron, and Armand Enamdjomeh. "America Is More Diverse than Ever - but Still Segregated." The Washington Post. WP Company, May 10, 2018.

<https://www.washingtonpost.com/graphics/2018/national/segregation-us-cities/>.

This source helped provide some information on how segregated Chicago still is today.